Disability Public Space Performance and Spectatorship

In Disability, Public Space Performance and Spectatorship: Unconscious Performers, Bree Hadley investigates what she identifies as interventionist performances by people with disabilities: performances that make acts of looking visible to those who look. In the public sphere, the disabled body is a spectacular body, and people with disabilities are involuntarily cast into the daily

Disability public space performance and spectatorship

As interested as I am in studies of disability and media, and disability art, I have often been disappointed at the lack of consideration for how audiences interpret images of disability in analyses of media and literary texts.

There is a paucity of reception studies by academics, which seems to
